communism. After his arrival in Japan he also studied communist doctrines. In February, 1936, with the object of propagating communist principles, he contributed an article with the heading "Ah Q"(193) to the first issue of the Eastern Literature(2012) (2012), a communistic magazine, dated harch 25, 1936. This magazine was published by Li's friend named Hou Feng(1212) residing in Shanghai and the article in question was a description of life in a prison, which story he claimed to have heard from one named Ling Kong(1212), a member of the Chinese Communist Party. Afterwards Li contributed other articles of the same nature to the magazine. Towards the end of March, 1936, he obtained one hundred copies of the magazine from Hou Feng in Shanghai and distributed the among Chinese students in Tokyo and also Japanese s
